Course content

The course deals with different types of business entities, focusing on the fundamental main features: creditor protection and minority protection. The consequences of distraint and bankruptcy are brought up, as well as the possibilities creditors have of protecting themselves against negative effects in case an opposite party becomes insolvent. Property crime is discussed, particularly such crimes that are committed against a company, its owner or its creditors for example in an insolvency position. The legal principles concerning various types of promissory notes are discussed and put in a larger context. Other subjects discussed in the course are company reconstruction (including deeds of arrangement) and debt relief.

Teaching

Teaching may take place in the form of lectures, group work, seminars, written assignments and mock shareholder's meetings. The course can also be given as an online course. In that case, teaching takes place via a platform for distance learning.

Prerequisites

Introduction to Commercial Law, 15 HE credits.

Examination

Examination takes place in the form of written examination, accomplished written assignments and active participation during seminars. For the online course, active participation on written assignments is furthermore required and also active participation in group discussions via the the platform for distance learning.

Grade

A, B, C, D, E, Fx, F

Limitations

Grade F stands for failed, meaning that a new test is required.
Grade Fx implies that an existing assignment needs to be supplemented in order to pass (no higher than grade E can be achieved with this procedure). With grade Fx, the student should request supplementation within two weeks after the Fx decision. If this request is not made within the time stated, the student will have to complete a new examination, which may only be done provided place is available at a forthcoming examination. If the student has taken an examination after an Fx decision, the possibility of supplementary qualification lapses.

Sustainable environment

A minor part of the course content deals with sustainable development.
